(4) If the Board of Directors has decided to issue ex-dividend (ex-coupon) units, see Article 11, from the beginning/middle of January until the annual general meeting, the issue price and the price on redemption of such units will be determined on the basis of the net asset value, see Article 10(2) and (3), see Article 10(1), less the value of the calculated and audited dividends for the preceding financial year and moreover as regards equity-based funds less the return thereon in the period during which ex-dividend units are issued.

If a fund is divided into unit classes, see Article 7, the pricing system to be applied to individual unit classes is determined by the Board of Directors of the Investment Fund.

(2) When applying the dual pricing system in respect of a fund, the issue price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of issue plus an amount to cover costs relating to the purchase of financial instruments and necessary issue costs, including administration, printing, advertisements and commission to agents and guarantors of the issue.

(4) When applying the single pricing system in respect of a fund, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the issue price. The issue price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of issue.

The issue price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of issue. If net issues of the period exceed a number of units fixed by the Board of Directors, the Investment Fund must calculate the issue price at the net asset value plus a fee to cover transaction costs. The Board of Directors of the Investment Fund must determine the size of this fee.

(7) When applying the modified single pricing system in respect of a unit class, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the issue price of the unit class. If net issues of the period as regards the unit class exceed a number of units fixed by the Board of Directors, the Investment Fund must calculate the issue price at the net asset value of the unit class plus a fee to cover transaction costs. The Board of Directors of the Investment Fund must determine the size of this fee.

(8) When applying the dual pricing system in respect of a fund, the redemption price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of redemption less an amount to cover costs relating to the sale of financial instruments and necessary redemption costs.

(9) When applying the dual pricing system in respect of a unit class, the redemption price is calculated at the net asset value of the unit class, see Article 10, made up at the time of redemption less an amount to cover costs relating to the sale of financial instruments and necessary redemption costs.

(10) When applying the single pricing system in respect of a fund, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the redemption price. The redemption price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of redemption.

(11) When applying the single pricing system in respect of a unit class, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the redemption price of the unit class. (12) When applying the modified single pricing system in respect of a fund, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the redemption price. The redemption price is calculated at the net asset value, see Article 10, made up at the time of redemption. If net redemptions of the period exceed a number of units fixed by the Board of Directors, the Investment Fund must calculate the redemption price at the net asset value less a fee to cover transaction costs. The Board of Directors of the Investment Fund must determine the size of this fee.

(13) When applying the modified single pricing system in respect of a unit class, the Investment Fund determines one or more points in time to calculate the redemption price of the unit class. The redemption price is calculated at the net asset value of the unit class, see Article 10, made up at the time of redemption. If net redemptions of the period as regards the unit class exceed a number of units fixed by the Board of Directors, the Investment Fund must calculate the redemption price at the net asset value of the unit class less a fee to cover transaction costs. The Board of Directors of the Investment Fund must determine the size of this fee.
